TEN CENTS IN THE FARE-BOX.

A young woman got into a Twenty-third-st. yesterday and gave ten cents to a gruff-looking old gentleman sitting next the fare-box, to be changed. The gentleman heedlessly put the ten cents into the box. The young woman suffered in silence for several moments until her injured feelings got the better of her and then she appealed to the driver.

He put ten cents of mine into the box," she said, "though the slide to the driver and at the old gentleman. The affected driver did not see how to argue the ter, but promised the young woman free transportation on his car the next time she wanted it. A beaver-looking gentleman sitting near the front door looked apathetic, but was unable to think of a way out of dilemma until a tall-mannered young man entered and started to deposit his fare. Just as he was on the verge of doing so the benevolent man seized him and said: "Give your five cents to that young lady over there." The young man stammered and looked hurt and stared until an understanding of the case dawned upon him when an impatient smile he handed the young man five cents. The other passengers were so dejected at the benevolent man's method of adjusting the penalty that two ladies went past their street without

SKELETONS FOUND IN BROOKLYN. Several Italian laborers engaged in excavating cellars for houses at Nos. 104-108 North Eighth-st., Flatbush, yesterday found two human skulls. A further search resulted in finding five more skulls and bones that showed that the bodies must have been buried in a hole. The bones were found about fourteen feet under ground and one of the skeletons began to able as soon as it was touched. A set of fine pearls were found on one of the skulls. Hundreds of persons used to see the bones. Stories of murders have been recorded in that neighborhood many times ago immediately after the battle. The property for over thirteen years belonged to Henry Hamilton, and while he possessed it had never been built upon. From an old record in the neighborhood it is learned that at the time the skulls were found, a colored man had a cabin about thirty years ago, but that the ground then much higher and had been leveled off since. The burial ground was formerly at North Ninth and First, and another one is still at North Ninth and First, and contains many bodies.
